

Centers for Disease Control and Prevention
National Center for Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion
Division of Nutrition and Physical Activity

Presents

Karen L. Edwards, MS, PhD
Associate Professor
Institute for Public Health Genetics,
University of Washington

Genomics, Obesity and Public Health Practice

October 14, 2004
1:30 PM Eastern Time

Objectives – The participant will:

1. Be familiar with the evidence for genetic influences on obesity.
2. Understand how genetic factors can influence obesity, both directly and indirectly.
3. Be familiar with one current application of genomic information for public health practice.

AGENDA

1:30-1:35	Teleconference Introduction
1:35-2:20	Presentation by Speaker
2:20-2:30	Questions and Answer and Closing Remarks

Approval for one hour of FREE Continuing Professional Education credit has been requested. Ask your Rachel Cox for the forms needed to receive credit.

Additional Information about Continuing Professional Education Credit:

Please note that in addition to Dietitians, Nurses and Certified Health Education Specialists can obtain continuing education credits by attending the DNPA teleconference calls by submitting a copy of the completed evaluation form and other required information (varies by organization) to the individual organization.

For example, the National Commission for Health Education Credentialing (NCHEC) allows CHES to apply for Category II credits.

A Category II activity is not pre-approved by NCHEC.

Up to 30 CECH can be earned by participating in quality activities that relate to at least one of the seven areas of responsibility for CHES, but were not approved in advance by NCHEC.

To apply for Category II CECH, you must complete the Category II Claim Form within 90 days following completion of an event. <http://www.nchec.org/forms/claimfrm.pdf>

CHES - For more information, please visit: <http://www.nchec.org/index.html>.

Nurses - For more information, please visit: <http://nursingworld.org/ancc/>.

*This is just a reminder. Please contact your association for more details on how to apply for continuing education credits.